With hallowed tread, we seek life's old familiar ways
And lingering there, sweet mem'ries throng us of the days
Inebriate with youth's joys, ere life had known its pain.
So may we seek this book, when each from each life's tide
Has borne us far—to lay the weight of years aside
And lingering o'er these pages—drink youth's cup again.

OREN BURBANK CHENEY.

FOUNDER AND FIRST PRESIDENT OF BATES COLLEGE.

Born December 10th, 1816—Holderness, N. H.
Died December 22nd, 1903—Lewiston, Me.

As a boy worked in paper-mill. Fitted for college at New Hampton, N. H., and Parsonsfield, Me. At New Hampton he allied himself with the cause of abolition of slavery. At Parsonsfield he was President of what is believed to be the first total abstinence society ever organized in a school. Taught school vacations while in college. Changed his college connection from Brown University to Dartmouth College in order to be associated with those who, at that time, were more in sympathy with the black race. Graduated from Dartmouth College in 1839.

Principal of academies at Farmington, Me., Strafford, N. H., Greenland, N. H., and Parsonsfield, Me.

Studied for the ministry at Whitestown, N. Y., in the seminary which was subsequently brought to Lewiston, was united with Bates College and became Cobb Divinity School.

Held pastorates at West Lebanon, Me., and Augusta, Me. While at West Lebanon was elected to the Legislature by the Free Soil Party to represent the towns of Lebanon and Sandford. Voted for the original prohibitory law, which was enacted at that time (1852), under the advocacy and supervision of Neal Dow. Obtained a charter for the establishment of Lebanon Academy. Was delegate to the National Free Soil Convention at Pittsburg in 1852, which nominated John P. Hale for the Presidency.

Pastor at Augusta 1852-1857. On hearing of the burning of Parsonsfield Seminary in September, 1852, conceived the idea of founding a seminary for Free Baptists in a more central location. Obtained a charter for Maine State Seminary, March 16, 1855. Laid the corner-stone of Hathorn Hall June 26, 1856. September 1, 1857, opened Maine State Seminary as Principal. This was chartered as Bates College on January 19, 1864, and the first class graduated in 1867.

President Cheney received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from Wesleyan University in 1863.

He secured a pledge of $10,000 from Capt. John Storer, a Maine man, a grant of buildings and land from the United States Government, and wrote himself the bill which created Storer College at Harper's Ferry, W. Va., an institution for the education of negroes. He was sought for and trusted in the counsels of his denomination and held many offices of honor and usefulness, three times being President of General Conference.

He won friends, funds and students for the college which he founded and, without losing courage, when others did, guided her interests through periods of financial panic and great perplexity and uncertainty. He opened the first co-educational college on the Atlantic seaboard and conferred the degree of A. B. on the first woman graduate.

He was tactful, resourceful, persevering and sagacious. He gathered about him faculty and friends who have, with him, set for Bates College her high ideals and have enabled her so fully to attain unto them.

RETROSPECT.

THE rain poured in torrents but the old Chapel bell sounded merrily as on September 11th, 1900, it called together the students of one, two and three years standing in the College. It summoned also nearly ninety young men and women from various localities who were to comprise the Class of 1904.

It was with the lightest of hearts and the fondest of hopes that we set out on our four years' course, which to us at that time seemed so long.

Class spirit soon grew. It manifested itself two days after our entrance into College, when the Sophomores posted the challenge for the annual ball game. We possess now a greater part of the challenge in a more or less tattered condition, and prize it as a trophy of our first public appearance.

(Owing to the spirit of the upper class men the side issues during the game were very amusing.)

Our ride with Professor Stanton to Lake Auburn is one of those days about which very little need be said, a mere mention of it calls up so many pleasant remembrances — new milk and sweet cider, for instance.

The Hallowe'en party at Dr. Salley's established a stronger friendship among us, for there we came to know each other and learned the tastes of our class mates (Miss E. A. Bray's for ice cream.)

The beginning of this term was marked by the pleasantries of receptions—the end, with the fear and trembling which comes from higher Algebra. During the winter term we were kept more closely at work as there was not so much to distract our attention. President Chase did, however, break up the monotony of our routine by giving us a reception. The Sophomores tried hard to get some fun out of the evening, too, but our host reached the pantry in time to save the ice cream from its exit through the window, so the Sophomores were thwarted again. After discharging their courtesies toward the young women, eleven of our boys found another less dignified reception awaiting them when they returned to the campus, this time tendered by twenty-five Sophomores in front of "the bricks." Both classes rushed hard for about an hour and a half, when the upper classmen, seeing that the Sophomores could not afford sufficient entertainment for our boys, marched both classes off the campus together. One sturdy Freshman, however, secured a handful of red hair from the head of a worthy Soph, and has it to-day in a glass case as a memento of the occasion. The Sophomore afterwards became a loyal member of 1904.

The Summer term passed in the usual Freshman fashion. Bird walks and a ride to No Name Pond were the chief festivities.

The next Fall brought together a large class of wicked Sophomores, ready for all the fun going. To foot-ball practice we sent out a number of good men, although not all made the team. We have had in our class seven foot-ball players—Cole, Cutten, Briggs, Hayes, Babcock, Rounds and Dennett. One day of this term was pleasantly spent with Miss Sands in her cottage at Mere Point. The delightful ride on the hayrack was, indeed, conducive to a good appetite.

When the harvest moon was shining and the apples in Prexy's orchard were ready for the pickers, it happened that some of our boys felt a call in that direction, so availed themselves of the first opportunity. Master Skunk made his appearance there the same night, and because of a too close acquaintance with him Doc was indisposed for a few days.

In the track meet this Fall we won the cup, and the evening of the day being Hallowe'en, our party this year was an especially joyous occasion. We went to Carville's farm-house, near Sabattus. Such good things to eat and drink, and best of all, the car was late in returning.

THE SOPHS' HALLOWE'EN.

On Hallowe'en of nineteen one,
The Sophs were out to have some fun.
Our hearts were glad and our spirits gay,
For we had won a cup that day.
So on a trolley car we went,
Our thoughts on fun and fortunes bent,
Till to the Carville farm we came,
Out toward Sabattus of dance-hall fame.
Arriving there our old class yell,
Our coming to the folks to tell,
We gave with all our main and might.
The fun and frolic of that night
Will e'er among us be renowned,
Whene'er October's end comes round.
At first we hunted nuts to see
What each ones fate was sure to be;
Some tramped, some taught, some fortunes made
That put Carnegie in the shade.

A sheet was hung up in a door
The girls behind the boys the before;
Each maiden then in turn applies
To holes cut in the sheet, her eyes.
A fellow then at sight of these,
Does guess whose glorius orbs he sees,
And forfeits if he fails to guess,
Something suggested by the rest.
The gipsy girl, Wanita fair,
With solemn and mysterious air
In secrecy did then relate
Each victim's good or evil fate.
To blindfold maids or youths instead
The saucers told whom each should wed.

Meanwhile a meal, in a room nearby,
Of good baked beans and pumpkin pie,
And other dishes of like fame
Was furnished by the farmer's dame.
All drinkables were near at hand
From coffee to new cider grand.
When each had eaten all he could,
And stolen pie plates made of wood,
We had some music furnished free
By members of the college Glee.
And Sinclair's banjo made to go
A Virginia reel that was not so slow.

Then to the parlor we adjourned,
With thoughts on toasts and speeches turned.
Prex. Spofford with his necktie grand,
Kept the assembly well in hand
And called for speeches from a few,
(We learned some things we never knew)
But some were bashful, so they said,
Or else the cider turned their head.
Our class "grandfather," Senter gray,
To us "children" a few words did say.
Babcock said cider was all right.
Professor Holmes, too, thanked us for the sight
And company of the jolly crowd.
And Babb, poor boy, did say aloud
He wasn't lonesome, so he wasn't good,
But he'd recommend us where'er he could.
Then as the time to part had come,
We went to get our wraps for home.
Poor Smith with cider lost his head
And tried to crawl beneath the bed,
And others, though not quite so bad,
Showed the effect the cider had.
At last broke up this party gay,
And homeward turned their noisy way,
Each pleased, when all was said and done,
That 1904 had had such fun.

B. H. R.

The first foot-ball game which we had ever witnessed between Bowdoin and Bates was played on Garcelon Field, Nov. 9th, 1901. Score, 11-0 in favor of Bates. A car ride and bonfire on Mount David furnished the evening's entertainment.

There has been some conjecturing as to how 1904 numerals were painted on Hedge Laboratory, and, indeed, 'tis yet a mystery. All that is known is that one man in his rapid exit to the back of the "Gym" took a plunge bath in the cistern. How like a fish you are, Bradford!

In the Winter term we made our acqaintance with Mr. Baker's Principles of Argumentation, and the faithful work of some at that time won for them later the greatly desired position as members of the inter-collegiate debating teams.

But dry subjects like debates cause one to lose his appetite, and in many cases some sort of a stimulant is needed. It is to be attributed to the forethought and kindness of a certain gentleman, no one knows who, that members of our class were well treated to all sorts of delicacies from Grant's, ordered by this unknown personage and paid for by members of 1905. At the latter part of this term college spirit was at its height for Bates won from the Harvard Seniors in debate. In the Spring we found time between the base-ball games for a ride to Underwood Springs, which proved one of the jolliest of our course.

The Fall term of the Junior year brought its usual good times in the way of class ride and Hallowe'en party, only the customary gaiety of Hallowe'en was somewhat saddened by the shock which we received on hearing of the sudden death of "Mrs. Peady." Indeed, one fair damsel was even a victim of hysterics at the sight of "the remains."

This Fall four of our men made the 'varsity foot-ball team, which position they have kept throughout their course.

Some of our girls now began to look forward with pleasure to rooms in the new dormitory, others with sadness at the thought of leaving Cheney, but many were kept busy studying rules of house government.

The only thing which is quite inexplicable this term is why Mr. Senter was so interested in getting the pulpit down from the top of the Library (unless it throws a bit of light on the question as to how it got there.)

The Winter term found most of our girls safely housed at Milliken and many of our good times must yet remain untold.

But we cannot forget the swell wedding of 1904, when Cynthia Imogene Van Housen was united in holy matrimony to Archibald Theophilus Miltourne. Then our "young men" in dress suits and young women in dainty gowns quite outdid themselves in Bates society. Those were the good old "Gym" times.

Our boys won this year in points at the Athletic Exhibition. The girls of the College had their first athletic contest, which proved a great success.

The day spent at Squirrel Island the last of the Summer term, like all days when 1904 has been out for a good time, could not have been improved upon.

During this term we were admirably represented in debate; Swan, Spofford and Weymouth defeated Boston University, and Briggs on the team with Beedy and Lord, 1903, defeated Trinity.

At the out-door inter-collegiate meets Lane, Robbins and Rounds have nobly sustained the record of the class and college. Lane has won the one mile race for three years. We shall long remember Robbins, who ran the last twenty-five yards in that two-mile race when he could scarcely see, and won it against a man who took strides two feet longer than his own.

During this term our class thoroughly renovated and furnished President Chase's office and recitation room.

Ivy Day came with all its charms for Juniors, and we were allowed to establish a "precedent" in planting our ivy by the side of Coram Library. Junior orations were written and read, and the jolly Junior year was at an end.

The Senior year brought with it a goodly amount of dignity which all our friends immediately appreciated. This year, although the best, needs the least said of it. Foot-ball and tennis have comprised the out-door pleasures, receptions and "at homes" the indoor.

The corn roast, at which Miss Lugrin was hostess, recalls to our minds how uncertain even the wisest are of their way through this world. How sadly we think of Mr. Spofford and Cole groping along in darkness through the woods, and finally losing their way, when the rowing on the Lake was so delightful.

Our Senior Hallowe'en was an exceedingly pleasant occasion, but feelings that it was the last would creep in with the knowledge that college days must soon come to an end. However, we were quite successful in drowning some of these feelings in clam buillion, and burying the remainder in pumpkin pie. In the Winter term those of our number who had been out teaching were busy making up back work, and our four debaters were hard at it, knowing that it was their last opportunity to win honor for themselves and Bates. They did admirably. In the Athletic Exhibition we again won in points, permitting us to have our class numerals engraved in the first two places on the shield. The girls exhibition, with Miss Walker as manager and Miss Given captain of our basket-ball team, was a grand success.

During our stay here there have been several noteworthy additions.

The laying of the corner-stone of Coram Library, October 1, 1900, and its subsequent completion and dedication November, 1901; the presentation at the same time of Professor Stanton's portrait by the Stanton Club, and later that of ex-President Cheney; the erection of the new grand stand on Garcelon Athletic Field, and the institution of dormitory life among the girls.

And now as we look back over our past history we feel that as a class we have lived every side of life at Bates. We have been well represented in foot-ball, track work, tennis, basket-ball, debating, society and association work. We are glad also that our class has taken the initiative in planning for the erection of a society building and assembly hall.

Aside from all this, many are the good times and well managed spreads in which we have been participants. For instance, the "fudge" racket at Milliken, Jud's twenty-first birthday celebration at Parker, an occasional transgression of the "law," etc., which we may not recount in detail. These will mean more to us in after years than many of the more solid points which we are likely to forget, and they will be among the things which later on will afford us many a good hearty laugh.

And now we hear in the old chapel bell, which sounded so merrily at our entrance, tones of sadness, for it is calling us together for the last time.

A day in January—Deep snow heaped upon the walks, icy winds sweeping across the campus.

SCENE I.

Act 1—8.35 A. M.

In the distance a student is seen wending his way from Science Hall toward Roger Williams. He is clad in a gorgeous red and gold cloak which looks like a Chinese dressing gown, and seems to be meditating. He enters Roger Williams Hall and disappears.

Act 2—8.40.

Chapel bell rings. A tall, dignified Senior, clad in white duck trousers, glides from side room, mingles with the crowd and, disregarding comments, hurries to a pew where he seeks to conceal himself from observation. The former student has, in the meanwhile, emerged from Roger Williams in ordinary costume and entered Chapel. At close of exercises both adjourn with class to Prof. Hartshorn's room, the one in usual dress, the other in white ducks.

SCENE II.

Act 1—Scene, Senior Table, Science Hall. Time, 12 M.

The controversy waxes loud. Holman's voice rises in triumphant tone. Harmon says little, but tries to look confident. The verdict is finally left to the ten Seniors present to be reported at supper.

Act 2—Scene, Grant's. Time, 7.30 P. M.

Ten Seniors grouped about the tables enjoying soda and ice-cream, Holman in the foreground with a double order before him. General good nature and jollification. After dishes are emptied Harmon has private conference with the proprietor and the assembly adjourns.

A Second Deluge.

Judson stood one day upon the marble steps of old Parker, dreaming of his far-off home. A dull sickening thud, the rushing of a deluge of water down his manly form, a loud laugh of triumph from the direction of Flander's room rudely awakened him. It might seem that this deluge was a cooling process, but its effect was quite the opposite. Judson made his way up two flights in an incredibly short space of time and demanded entrance to the room of his class-mate, threatening death at first sight if refused. The door was heavily secured, but Judson was able to gain through a crack in the door, a view of the interior of the room. Strange to relate, the intense passion under which he was laboring gave rise to an hallucination. He saw in the room (he thought) Swan and David. With a vow of vengeance upon them he secured a hammer and nails and spiked their guns—or rather, the door. Thus Judson secured Palamon and Arcite (or thought that he did), and, leaving them to a death by starvation, descended to the campus. Ye gods! what a glorious revenge was his. In his triumph he called loudly for David, and, oh, horrors!—from the fourth floor at the remote eastern wing of old Parker, David thrust forth his classic head and asked the meaning of this lusty call. The cold chills ran up and down Judson's spine. Again he called for Swan, and behold Swan's fair head thrust out from the fourth story of the western wing of old Parker! Judson with a howl of dismay fairly flew up two flights to the room whose door he had spiked. He took one look; there was Jake, white with fury, calling down fire upon the head of the man who had nailed up his room. He had (he said) come from the Gym, burst in his door and found the room empty. Swan and David were not there; indeed they knew nothing about the affair. For three years Judson has wondered how Swan and David (whom he is sure were in the room) escaped and how much they prevaricated. We wonder if Jake would tell a fib in a pinch?

Dr. Veditz—"If we are not convinced that the law of heredity is absolute, we are at least certain that the offspring of an elephant won't be a clothes-wringer."

After John had been talking sotto voce for some time in mathematics Prof. Rand, in desperation, said: "Mr. David, I'll give you five dollars if you will keep still."

David (with alacrity)—"Professor, I will do it."

Fortier—"Who do you suppose devotes the most time to his Junior part?"

Cutten—"Doc Rounds." ("Coeducation," Summer term, 1904).

Deciphered from inscription on door of J. A. Sinclair, 30 Science Hall:
"A Fool and his Honey are soon Mated."

One of Many.

Of the many jokes played on the Freshies none was better than the following:

On the night of May 17th, 1902, when things were quieter than usual, and when the systems of some dozen Sophs were demanding nourishment, one of the boys suggested refreshments at the Freshies' expense. Instantly the moderate demands developed into such craving pangs of hunger that the suggestion was unanimously adopted.

Accordingly Grant was called up by telephone, and under the auspices of the president of the Freshman class, three gallons of ice cream with other necessary things were ordered to be delivered at Parker Hall in half an hour. Two boys were stationed at the corner of the building to await their arrival. At the appointed time the team appeared, and the unsuspicious driver, being assured that one of the boys was their president, and being told that the "Sophs" might get the stuff away from them, hastily delivered the goods and drove away. A few days later among the receipts of '05 could be found the following:

May 17th, 1902.

Bates College, Class of '05,
To A. L. Grant. Dr.

To 3 gallons ice cream, - - - $4.50
" 8 lbs. cookies, - - - - 1.00—$5.50

Received payment, A. L. Grant.

"Say, Gene, wake up! Listen! Yes, wake up. Keep still. Don't you———"

"What's the matter? Eh? Hear what? Listen! Sh! Keep quiet. By jingoes, it is, old man. She's ringing! It's the bell. Sure thing. Eh? Sure they have. We've won it. The boys have done it again. Gee, ain't it great? Eh? Yes sir, rubbed it into Trinity again."

"Hear the horns and revolvers. Well, I guess it's great work. There'll be a racket to-night all right. Hope they get the Freshies out and keep her ringing till morning. Get on your things. Where are the horns? Let's wake up the fellows. Another debate won by our boys! I tell you, old man, I guess Bates owes more than a little to 1904."

"That's what she does."

NOTICE.

Wanted, for aiding J. K. Flanders in seizing and holding intoxicating liquors—Miss Jane Given. The last mentioned party on visiting the county jail in company with Inspector Veditz and his auxiliaries ferreted from the dispensary a flagon of ardent, spirituous and otherwise intoxicating liquors. In her attempt to place it in Mr. Flanders' possession it was precipitated to the floor, its contents spilled and the deed thus made known The young lady is small, her most salient feature a foxy look. The person apprehending her will be rewarded. Sheriff B. L. UFF.

Heard in Recitations.

Dr. Veditz—(Scene, sociology class)—"Mr. Wallace, will you explain what is meant by 'Pasteurized milk'?"

Mr. Wallace—"Pasteurized milk is milk from cows turned out to pasture."

Scene, class room of Prof. Knapp (recitation in Horace)—Mr. Spofford translates exceedingly melodiously and fluently when Mr. David from his dreams in the corner grunts "Whoa!"

Prof. Knapp—"Drive on, Mr. Spofford."

Prof. Hartshorn, in class on Chaucer—"Mr. Holman, will you read on from this point?"

Line 674, tne line as follows: "For in his male (valise) he had a pilwebeer (pillow case)."

Mr. Holman's astonishing rendition—"For in his dress suit case he had a pail of beer."

Prof. Clark, in Physics class, (with humorous twinkle in his eye)—"Miss ———, what do you know about cells (sells)?"

Miss ———, quickly—"The most famous one is the Clark cell."

Mr. Holman (to his neighbor)—"Why does Mitchell's mustache remind you of a basket ball team?"

Neighbor (after deep thought)—"I don't know. Why is it?"

Holman—"Because there are just five on a side."

Dr. Leonard—"To help you in learning the principal parts of these German verbs I think it would not be a bad plan to write them out on a piece of paper and carry them for ready reference."

Senter—"Professor, would't it be a good plan to put them under our pillows at night?"

Dr. Leonard—"If you wish to put a great deal of time on them, Mr. Senter, that would be a very good way for you to do."

A Narrow Escape.

There was evidently something in the air that Saturday afternoon of the Freshman prize declamations in 1903. Groups of Juniors were seen whispering here and there and when at five o'clock ten Junior girls with dress-suit cases and beaming faces were assembled at the corner it was proof positive that something was up.

As the jolly girls entered the car envious glances were cast upon them by those returning from declamations, for every one knew that when that crowd started the devil was to pay.

They took the train for Lisbon Falls, and it was a taking of the train in every sense of the word. When they arrived there was a grand rush for Maude's, and what a welcome was given them.

Now, if two hours later one might have been down town he would have seen ten jolly Junior boys jumping on the Lisbon Falls car. They went to Maude's, too, and what a welcome they received from daintily gowned girls with good fellowship shining in every face.

Such fun it was, entertained as Maude only could entertain. The boys threaded needles, oh, so briskly, and when poor Guy was left at one table for several times he kept a string of needles threaded. Next time the bell tapped Guy went up to try his hand at Jack Straws, Grocery Store and Dominoes; but in spite of his wariness Keith was best versed in those games and won out. Poetry was composed which will live through succeeding generations. It was surprising to meet some strange people—ask Judson who he was. Thus, with fun and jollity the evening passed, ending with college songs.

The boys took the midnight back to Lewiston, leaving the girls with Maude. There was something of a hub-bub before every eye was closed, but once closed they were not to be opened till twelve the following day. They came back to Lewiston at half past two and no sooner arrived than the thundercloud burst. All the carefully laid plans were revealed. Nella was victim number one. She reported to the girls with weeps galore. A council followed; it was determined to make the next attack en masse; "mum" was to be the word. So with suppressed laughs they went down. The first onslaught was terriffic, but by Bessie's soothing words and dumbness from the rest of the force quietness was restored. A date was made with Foxy for nine o'clock on Monday morning, and at nine on Monday morning nine jolly girls with solemn faces, but beaming eyes, and poor Nella with face like weeping Niobe entered the council chamber where Foxy reigned supreme. They arranged themselves in a straight line before him. When his "W-e-l-l g-i-r-l-s" was uttered Bessie's "We've come to make up, Professor Jordan," followed. "Come to make up, have you? W-e-l-l, that's encouraging."

Here endeth the council.

GREAT SOCIAL EVENT.

TWO OF BATES' MOST POPULAR YOUNG PEOPLE UNITED IN MARRIAGE.

On the eve of February seventh occurred the most charming event of the season, when Cynthia Imogene Van Housen was united in holy wedlock to Archibald Theophilus Miltourné. The bride and groom are the most popular young people in town, and before 7 o'clock Gymnasium Church was crowded with the friends of the happy couple. Indeed, so many were present that the young men of Cheney House were obliged to bring over pews from Hathorn Hall. The church was artistically decorated with red poppies, the favorite flower of the bride. At half-past seven the strains of Lohengrin pealed forth from the organ, played by the accomplished hand of Miss Elise Reynolds. The door at the front of the church opened and there appeared the holy officiator, Reverend B. Bray, O. K., followed by the best man, Monsieur Escaré, and the groom. Monsieur Escaré came all the way from (South) Paris to assist at the wedding. The groom looked startlingly beautiful. So handsome he appeared as he walked slowly in that the audience was visibly affected. And now the door in the rear of the church opened, and all stretched their necks to see the bridal party. First came with slow tread the ushers, Max H. Carrow and Avel M. Wheeler, followed by G. Valentine Thompson and John M. Given. Then came the little flower girls, Ethelyn White and Maudie Parkin. They were cunningly gowned in white. They were followed by the dainty bridesmaids, Bessie Cora Helena Cooper, Florence Ethyl Hodgson, Edna Mae North and Alice Lora Sandys. Miss Cooper was charmingly gowned in blue silk trimmed with chiffon and carried white roses. Miss Hodgson wore a sweet gown of ecru mousseline de soie over cerise silk. She wore a cerise rose in her hair, and carried the same flowers in her hand. Miss North was becomingly gowned in white muslin trimmed with black velvet. She carried yellow roses. Miss Sandys wore a dainty white muslin with rare Battenburg lace and carried red roses. Next came the maid of honor, Miss Virabel Van Housen, sister to the bride. She wore a dainty creation of green silk with pearl trimmings and carried pinks. Leaning on her father's arm, came the blushing bride. Her beauty was such that the audience held their breath. Her cheeks were the color of a peach. Her low-necked dress revealed a neck of dazzling beauty. She wore an exquisite gown of point d'esprit over silk with duchess lace trimmings. Her veil was white lace and was fastened with a diamond sun-burst. When Dr. Bray commenced the ceremony every one felt that it was a very solemn occasion. When Mr. Van Housen gave the bride away the audience were strongly moved. And when the minister said, "I pronounce you man and wife," they were again visibly affected. Miss Van Housen turned back the veil and the groom gently kissed the blushing bride. No one ever saw a handsomer couple. The coal black hair and white skin of the groom contrasted strikingly with the flaxen hair and pink cheeks of the bride. The little flower girls preceded the procession, strewing poppies before the happy pair. After the ceremony the bridal party received their friends and then came an expectant hush. The door opened and the couple appeared. Mrs. Miltourné was dressed in a charming traveling suit of brown, and wore a white hat trimmed with a black crow. The groom carried the dress-suit case which was trimmed with the usual amount of paper and ribbons. A shower of rice and old shoes greeted them, but the groom valiantly defended his bride with his manly arm. With shouts and peals of laughter the happy couple started on their honeymoon where they will visit Mars Hill, Palermo, Rome and Paris. The presents were too numerous to mention. Among them were a dozen silver spoons, costly diamond and pearl brooches and unique match-safes, but those over which the bride became ecstatic were an exquisite brown bean-pot, a redwood receptacle for confining mice and a dainty kerosene oil can. Everything went off delightfully and all agreed that it was the most charming wedding ever held in town.

I am black, but comely, O, ye daughters of Jerusalem, as the tents of Kedar, as the curtains of Soloman. —Ross.

Love me little, love me long,
Is the burden of my song;
Love that is too fierce and strong
Burneth soon to waste.

I am the rose of (New) Sharon
And the lily of the valley. —Swan.

Dedicated to J. C. B.

I stood on the station at midnight,
While the clocks were striking the hour,
When the Falls in the sentient distance
Were hushed 'neath their icy bower.
And like the breezes stealing
Through forests of fragrant pine,
Those thirty-eight degrees below zero
Stole chillingly down my spine.

* * * * * *

How often, O, how often
I longed for that lingering train,
For my room in old cozy Parker—
Yet, ah, in vain, in vain.
For my fingers and toes seemed frozen
In the chill of that wintry air,
And those four weary hours of waiting
Seemed greater than I could bear.
